The following information was received from a sub-source close to the King, on the afternoon of 2 December:

1. Shortly after noon on Saturday, 2 December, General Sanatescu presented to the King, his own resignation as Prime Minister, together with that of the entire Government.
2. The King accepted the resignations and called upon General Radescu to form a new government and have it ready to take the oath of office by Monday morning.
3. During the course of the afternoon the King had interviews with leaders of all principal political parties and they indicated they wished the new government to be political in form and not a "technicians" government. In view of these requests of political leaders, the King instructed General Radescu to find a formula upon which political leaders could agree for formation of political government; and that failing this, General Radescu should appoint a technicians government.
4. Moin, Bratiansu and Petrescu recommended to the King and to General Radescu that the latter pay a call upon Mr. Vashinski for the purpose of "informing" him of prospective formation of new government. The King and General Radescu are as yet undecided as to whether this step should be taken, as they are inclined to feel that this would constitute too much of an admission that the Rumanian Government has a legitimate interest in this matter, which is of strictly internal significance.
